From the Rio Grande and her tributaries, such as the Rio Chama and the Pecos River, to the Colorado River and her tributaries, such as the Gila River and the San Juan River, western rivers are a cornerstone of our region's identity. WildEarth Guardians prioritizes the protection of rivers, large and small, because they are essential to life as we know it. Though streams and rivers represent a mere 1 percent of the landscape, these arteries of life are ecological backbones in the region's otherwise arid landscape. Western waterways provide habitat for approximately 75 percent of all native plants and animals, including literally hundreds of species threatened with extinction. Rivers not only sustain us with their

The American West hosts a dazzling array of native wildlife and plants, from the mighty black bear and grey wolf, to minute caddisflies, springsnails, and irises. The diversity of life in the region is a product of varied topography and a multitude of ecological niches that these native species call home. WildEarth Guardians works to protect the vast spectrum of native species because they have an inherent right to exist, and because we, like most people, value wildlife, wildlands, and naturally functioning systems. With ecological function and biodiversity come amenities such as clean water, clean air, and natural landscapes to watch wildlife. From common species such as the coyote to rare creatures such as the black-

Our vision is simple: a future 100 percent powered by renewable energy by 2035. To get there, the goal of our Climate and Energy program is reform that prioritizes energy efficiency and conservation, phases out fossil fuels, and embraces environmentally appropriate clean power sources. The tragedy of the Gulf oil spill was a disturbing reminder of just how much we stand to lose by relying on fossil fuels. That's why WildEarth Guardians' goal has been and continues to be simple: To help clean energy take root by exposing the true cost of fossil fuels.

--In 2011, our efforts continued to set the stage for watershed gains toward clean energy.

If the funds aren't used, they may be returned to the contributing parties. The parties are negotiating an extension of the agreement. The Organization is the fiscal agent of the funds. abundant supplies of clean water but also with both their wonder and beauty.

--100,000 Native cottonwoods and willows planted to jumpstart restoration of streams and rivers in the Southwest.

--Seeking a Rio Grande capable of adapting to New Mexico's changing climate, WildEarth Guardians challenged a proposal to transfer water from Socorro farmland to the City of Santa Fe. The cumulative effect of these transfers threatens ecosystem resilience and local agriculture in the middle Rio Grande, and allowing them does not provide additional water supply for the future.

--Guardians' protests of water transfers are part of a new, larger campaign to secure the Rio Grande rights to its own waters and help agriculture adapt to the region's changing climate.

--Publication of our first-ever book "The Rio Grande: An Eagle's View" which documents a stunning visual journey from the Great River's headwaters to the Gulf of Mexico. The book was a multi-year collaboration with aerial photographer Adriel Heisey.

Wild Places Program:

The American West is a place set apart with abundant public lands and remnant ancient forests, pristine grasslands and wild headwaters and streams, which remind us of the spectacular richness that once epitomized this region. WildEarth Guardians' Wild Places Program protects public lands with a primary emphasis on National Forests and Bureau of Land Management lands. There are more than 300 million acres of public lands in the 17 western states and our goal is to prevent their capture and destruction by private, extractive interests. Sadly, many of the diverse ecosystems in the West are in trouble. For example, the Southwestern ponderosa pine ecosystem, the Interior West's Sagebrush Sea, and fragile streams and wetland habitats are all considered endangered ecosystems. While advocating to end activities that threaten to destroy our public wildlands in the American West, we also work to ensure that they remain biologically intact and ecologically functional by actively restoring previously damaged lands, waters and ecosystems. Our accomplishments mean not only greater protection for wild landscapes but also the wildlife, water and air that make them the treasures we cherish.
